The Third Party System is a term of periodization used by historians and describes the period of American history following the American Civil War when the nation's farmers began to organize as a third party to challenge the two major political parties. The Greenback Labor Party, founded in 1891, was a political party that ran James Weaver in the 1892 election. The party's goal was to promote inflation through paper money and to reform the banking system. The Greenback Labor Party collapsed in the 1880s, but its legacy lived on in the Populist movement, which emerged in the late 19th century as a response to the economic and political challenges faced by farmers and workers. The Populists, like the Greenback Labor Party, advocated for inflationary policies, the regulation of railroads, and the protection of farmers and workers. Their success and failure in third-party politics is explored in Darcy Richardson's book "Others: Third-Party Politics From the Nation's Founding to the Rise and Fall of the Greenback-Labor Party."
